■ There are too enough children's shows on the air. A survey shows that youngsters from 6-11 are happier than anyone else about the 1965-66 television season. And they're only slightly happier than their older brothers and sisters, from 12-17 years.

Home Testing Institute's TvQ survey measures how well people in various age groups like each program rather than how many people, en masse, watch each program. Thus TvQ reports that on the average, folks over 50 in the test sample were less pleased than the youngsters with this season's shows. Those from 18-34 were less pleased than those over 50. Least satisfied: those in the 35-49 age group. ■ These figures are based on the first two weeks of the season. They could change to some extent as the season develops, but experience has shown they do not change drastically.

It's interesting to note—at least it was to us—how the favorite programs of the different age groups vary. For youngsters from 6-11, the top three shows were Bewitched, Gilligan's Island and Flipper; top three for the 12-17 group were The Man from U.N.C.L.E., Bewitched, Shindig; 18-34—I Spy, The Man from U.N.C.L.E. and The Long, Hot Summer; 35-49—Bonanza, Walt Disney and Saturday Night at the Movies; over 50—Bonanza, Lawrence Welk and The Virginian.

Many programs had very low TvQ scores with adults, very high ones with children—and a couple of those turn up among Nielsen's Top 10 programs on the air. Some of the children's favorites are on after the Children's Hour—7:30-8:30 P.M.

■ Somebody must be doing something wrong. Way up there in the networks they're turning too much of nighttime television into a substitute for skipping rope, building tree houses and chewing bubble gum.

The President's wife goes campaigning

She'll conduct the Nation's viewers on a tour of Washington in a drive to beautify the capital

"She is an astounding woman." The speaker: ABC producer John Secondari. The object of his accolade: Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson, with whom Secondari worked in the filming of "A Visit to Washington with Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson on Behalf of a More Beautiful America," to be shown on the ABC network on Thanksgiving Day. Over the nine weeks it took to film the special, in which Mrs. Johnson points out the good and bad features of today's Washington and tells of her hopes for its future, Secondari became an admirer of the First Lady.

"With all her commitments," he said,

In the White House: A technician checks lighting.

On the West Porch of Capitol: Mrs. Johnson edits Teleprompter copy.

"she managed to fit her schedule to ours so that there was very little wasted motion. She is the only one I have ever worked with at that level who understood what we were trying to do."

After her last day of shooting, Mrs. Johnson invited the entire crew into the downstairs library of the White House, where she showed them the Johnson home movies she had taken. "We must have watched the show for about an hour and a half," Secondari said. "It was near dinner time and she was having a reception for 1500 that evening, yet she entertained us royally."

How they put a SKIN DIVER on a HORSE

A half-forgotten script, a call to Hong Kong and, suddenly, Lloyd Bridges was riding the West

BY FRITZ GOODWIN

All at once the TV woods are full of heroes in search of themselves. The chances that such oddly assorted stalwarts as Lloyd (The Loner) Bridges, Robert (Shenandoah) Horton and Ben (Run for Your Life) Gazzara will ever find anything are remote. One thing seems certain, though. Before their quests for self-identification end, the audience is going to be called upon to suspend its disbelief in some highly improbable tales.

Yet when it comes to the board-inghouse reach of coincidence and card-turns of outrageous fortune, it's doubtful that anything befalling The Loner as he hard-knocks around the fictional West will surpass the actual train of events his show has experienced.

The story began almost five years ago. The fade-in found darkly tanned, dynamic Rod Serling, usually described as one of TV's most honored (talented, distinguished) writers (creators), peering into the future with furrowed brow. His show, The Twilight Zone, despite critical praise and viewer popularity, seemed due to go off the schedule.

It was an auspicious time for new ventures, and Serling came up with a one-hour pilot script about a character he called The Loner, heading West after the Civil War. Hunt Stromberg Jr., CBS programming executive in Hollywood, looked it over with interest, but noncommittal interest. Relations unhappily had become strained between Serling and James Aubrey, the Omnipotent Eye of CBS in New York. Aubrey was increasingly and pungently vocal about Twilight Zone's going over budget, Serling remembers, and the network's decision on The Loner was reasonably swift—and firmly negative.

The script received a more sympathetic reading by William Dozier, then production head at Screen Gems.

Dozier liked The Loner and said so at the time. Liking it and doing something about it were different matters, however—especially at a period in Western culture's evolution when the sages of network TV (not only at CBS but at NBC and ABC also) were in solemn agreement that the days of the horse opera were waning.

Along about that time the tricky winds changed, and Twilight Zone was given the go-ahead for another season. Serling stuffed The Loner script away in a drawer and forgot it.

There followed a long dissolve, to early spring of 1965. Bill Dozier, now in business for himself, was in New York for the annual TV selling season. He had a couple of pilot films under his arm, situation comedies, and he wasn't having much luck peddling either one.

"Now if you had a half-hour Western," they said at CBS. "That's what we really could use on Saturday."

No more than 10 minutes after getting the cue, Dozier remembered something. He picked up the phone and started tracking Serling.

Cut to Hong Kong, of all places. Serling was on an 11-week tour for the State Department, trying to field questions about U.S. foreign policy and commercial television. Anybody who thinks either one of those subjects is tough should try explaining the other, and it was a somewhat punchy Serling who returned to his hotel room and discovered Dozier's cablegram proposing that The Loner be cut to a half-hour and hastily packaged for CBS.

"I thought it was a pipe dream," Serling said later. "Who was going to buy a show that had been lying around more than four years?"

What Dozier decided to go with was some solid star insurance, if he could get it. His number-one choice and, as things turned out, the only actor he offered the role to was Lloyd Bridges. The well-muscled, seemingly indestructible blond star of 156 now-syndicated Sea Hunt episodes, sitting comfortably on the reputed million he made in flippers and scuba mask, was far from anxious to do another series. It had been two years since he had finished a single season's work in the flatteringly titled but less rewarding Lloyd Bridges Show. "You need all of two years to rest up and forget just what madness a series can be," Bridges observed. Madness or not, he accepted Dozier's offer.

"Rod Serling was the main reason. With him doing 75 percent of the scripts and Bill Dozier producing, I knew I'd be in a quality show."

The package Dozier delivered to CBS actually was little more than a blue-ribboned idea. There was no pilot film, not even a written presentation—just the names of Serling, Bridges and Dozier and something called The Loner. CBS bought it. The final decision was made by the same man who had turned thumbs down four years earlier, Jim Aubrey.

It was one of his last official acts. Less than a week later Aubrey was out, suddenly deposed from the presidency of CBS-TV. Preparations on The Loner came to a jarring, continued uncertain—but only momentary—halt. Then Dozier got word that the network's new regime was ratifying the agreement for 26 shows (with a cut-back clause after 13 airings, in the event of a Saturday night catastrophe).

Returned from his foreign travels, Serling barely had time to roll up his sleeves on new-series business before he went to Washington, D.C., to make a speech—and wound up hospitalized for what was believed to be a heart attack. The diagnosis later was revised to read exhaustion.

With the medical proviso that he wouldn't get involved in on-the-set production, Serling quickly bounced back to write 14 of the first 23 finished scripts and wield a unifying blue pencil on the others. The Loner went before the cameras with such a rush that it couldn't find space at its home studio, 20th Century-Fox, and had to be made at MGM.

Was it a Western?

As shooting progressed, everyone concerned had words of praise for the Serling-brand story situations and dialog, although there was some nagging doubt that the network—if it had something formula in mind when it asked for a Saturday night Western—was getting what it ordered.

Director Don Taylor, who did two of the early episodes, summed it up: "Aside from the fact we had horses working, you couldn't really call them Westerns. One of mine was a comedy, the other more of a love story."

As the show neared its debut, Bridges sat comfortably tall and convincing in the saddle between exterior scenes, admitting that the finer shadings of The Loner character still gave him problems. "It has bugged me quite a bit that the guy doesn't have any definite background, other than the Union cavalry—even more that he isn't definitely headed anywhere. But Rod keeps telling me to let him worry about the character, just to trust him. And you know something?" He broke into a grin. "I do."

But somebody up there—at CBS—didn't. Even before The Loner went on the air in September, production was suspended.

Serling was seething

And Serling was seething. "What CBS bought," he told the press, "was a series of 24-minute weekly shows—all legitimate, human, dramatic vignettes—set against a Western background. What they now want is a show with violence and killing attendant on a routine Western."

By "they" he meant Michael H. Dann, vice president in charge of programming for CBS. Serling said that at a meeting early in September Dann had urged him to inject more violence into the show. He had refused, and Dann had halted production, after 15 episodes had been filmed.

Dann, however, denied that he had even breathed the word "violence." What he had asked for was more "action," he said, more "movement"—"chases, running gun battles, run-away stagecoaches, etc."

Serling and Dann had spoken. Now they waited to hear from Nielsen, who, it was assumed, would determine whether The Loner would resume production or drop out of sight after 15 episodes. The new season's first national Nielsen ratings were published Oct. 11, and the results—15 for The Loner—were not heartening to Serling, Bridges, Dozier and Co. Dann, however, pulled a surprise. The Loner, he told TV GUIDE 48 hours after Nielsen Day, would stay on the air.

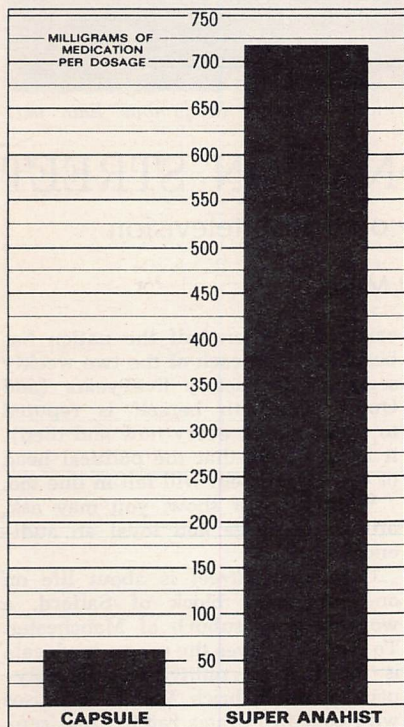

This brought to an end the first chapter of what promises to be an action-packed, movement-filled saga of a show in search of itself.

A VISIT TO CORONATION STREET

... the most popular show on British television

By Robert Musel

If you can't imagine President Johnson confessing to the Nation that he is a fervent admirer of Peyton Place, then you will find it hard to believe what happened at London's ancient Guildhall on the eve of the fall television season. Prime Minister Harold Wilson, speaking at the 10th-anniversary dinner of the commercial television network, put himself on record as a devoted fan of Coronation Street, a sort of transatlantic ancestor of P.P.

The Prime Minister is about as high as you can go in Britain, short of Buckingham Palace, but his praise for Coronation Street was received modestly at the headquarters of Granada TV, in the damp, gray northern city of Manchester, where the program originates. When half the nation has been watching each of the two weekly segments for nearly five years (and Queen Elizabeth herself is reputed to sneak a look every now and then), it is inevitable that the political head of the government will fall in line too.

What kind of show, you may ask, attracts so large and loyal an audience?

Coronation Street is about life on one imaginary block of Salford, a working-class suburb of Manchester. To American eyes the program's locale is bleak and uninviting: densely-packed, small, brick Victorian houses with coal-fire grates rather than central heating; the kind of place where the evening's entertainment is apt to be no more than a pint of beer and a chat in the local pub, The Rover's Return.

As for the characters themselves, any American writer who seriously proposed them for a series would be strait-jacketed by the nearest Nielsen tabulator. The "stars"—Granada doesn't like the word—are Ena Sharples, a widow and caretaker of The Glad Tidings Mission Hall who is the local busybody and gossip; and Elsie Tanner, a billowy, flirtatious grandmother and divorcée. Ena, who always wears a hair net, is played by 62-year-old Violet Carson. Elsie Tanner is portrayed by 41-year-old Patricia Phoenix, an ample-but-attractive redhead who describes herself as "an overblown rose rather than a delicate flower."

The menfolk and the other inhabitants of Coronation Street also make no concessions to the fantasy world of American viewing. Len Fairclough (Peter Adamson) is the street handyman and boy friend of Elsie Tanner between her other romances. Then there is Albert Tatlock (Jack Howarth), an elderly widower; Minnie Caldwell (Margot Bryant), an old-age pensioner and friend of Ena's; Jack Walker (Arthur Leslie) and his wife Annie (Doris Speed), who run The Rover's Return; and Elsie's errant 23-year-old son Dennis (Philip Lowrie).

That will do for a sampling. There are occasional visitors to the street, like the married sailor who tried to have his way with Elsie on the false promise of marriage. But basically the stories concern the score or so of running characters who are its residents. And so, you may wonder, how come out of such unlikely materials Granada has woven the television magic that not even the mighty Bonanza has been able to dislodge from the top of the British ratings?

The answer is that the series is so lovingly written, acted and produced that its average audience of 26 million (in a nation of 54 million) is almost convinced it is not watching a program about life on Coronation Street but is eavesdropping on life itself. The show's writers are all northern born, bred and resident; Misses Carson and Phoenix derive from Coronation Street backgrounds; executive producer Harry Kershaw can practically see Salford from his office window.

They care about the people of Coronation Street, and so the viewers have come to care too, to share in the little dramas and the big dramas as they unfold every Monday and Wednesday at 7:30 P.M. Ena Sharples is desperately ill! National gloom till she recovers. A young mother killed on the street in an automobile accident! The campaign for safe driving gets a fillip. A baby kidnaped by a childless woman! Mothers everywhere take the lesson to heart. The married sailor tries to betray our Elsie—and workmen stop the actor playing the sailor in the street and threaten him with violence if he does her wrong.

"We find real life more wholly absorbing than sex," said Kershaw, a remark which may or may not have been aimed at Peyton Place, which recently began a run on British television.

Coronation Street was the idea of Tony Warren, a 22-year-old promotion man for Granada, who based it on his own experiences in Salford and took the names of its characters from tombstones in its cemetery. He wrote the first five episodes and then Kershaw was called in to assemble a writing staff. The first program was broadcast in December 1960.

Kershaw examined TV GUME's synopsis of the story of Peyton Place and said it would be impossible to encapsulate the themes of Coronation Street the same way. "Our story line already runs 3500 foolscap pages," he said. "Coronation Street continued doesn't waste time. In 25 minutes we go through 50 pages of script—double the average. Our theory is not to pad out the story to fill the time but to get more story. Some serials take eight weeks to tell a story we would finish off in three. Besides our featured performers, we've used more than 500 supporting players and 3000 extras. The extras are not essential to the plots, but they are essential to reality—like the lampposts on the street.

"From time to time we have a 'comment scene.' Let's say Ena and Minnie meet in The Rover's Return for a drink. Now if the writer has any particular social evil he wants to write about, this is the place. It may not advance the plot one jot, but we think it's important. For example he might have them talk about children neglecting their old folks, about pensions or juvenile delinquency or housing or any of the things that would actually concern the kind of people they are.

"School children," he said, with pride, "are often given homework based on Coronation Street."

Hair net's history

Kershaw said Ena's hair net, possibly the most famous prop in British show-business history, appeared in the third episode as a "happy accident." "But as soon as it happened," he said reverently, "everyone knew it wasn't an accident. It was History."

As we wandered down to the small studio that houses the Coronation Street sets, Kershaw motioned toward the executive wing of Granada.

"They never interfere, you know. Once they take a decision to go ahead they let you get on with it."

I wanted to go look at these strange television executives, but rehearsal was about to start.

In this episode Elsie Tanner's roving eye got her picked up by a married man in a pub, and while they were parked in his car, he collapsed and died at the wheel. Panicking, Elsie ran for home, forgetting her gloves in the automobile. These were found by the police who later arrived to see if she could, in the formal phrase, "assist us in our inquiries." Tableau: Mrs. Tanner twisting her fingers in anguish, her son loyally wrapping his arms about her and informing the looming detective: "She's done nothing wrong."

A wild flirtation

"The show can be sexy," Kershaw remarked, "but only because of the genuine relationships we have established. Early in the program we introduced Elsie to Len Fairclough, and they have a wild verbal flirtation. We never see them going upstairs, but our viewers will cross any t's and dot any i's themselves. Only in sex do we depart from absolute reality. But then there should be closed doors on television just as there are closed doors in real life."

That Coronation Street is well acted goes without saying. Miss Phoenix played the tart with the heart of gold in the film "The L-Shaped Room." Miss Carson was a Shakespearean actress and concert pianist ready to retire when the war ended. "I thought TV would finish me," she said. "I thought they would want glamour. But what they wanted was a hag in a hair net, and I'm that."

The program has such prestige in England that Kershaw can always call back a performer he needs—except one. Len Fairclough had a son, Stanley, played by actor Peter Noone. His mother ran off with a salesman and took him along.

"We couldn't afford to bring him back now," Kershaw said. "He made a record while waiting. He's Herman of Herman's Hermits."

(and appears in it, too)

A critic once said of Simone Signoret, after seeing her as a rather frowzy, older-woman love interest in the award-winning movie "Room at the Top": "... A tigerish gleam flitted across her rather sullen face. ... At once, every man became a hunter. ... Simone Signoret continues to enthrall. Perhaps her mystery is the product of her maturity."

Simone Signoret is fortyish, with a rather heavy figure, a woman who obviously has seen much of the world. Yet she is married to one of Europe's biggest romantic stars, Yves Montand, and she has become something of an international sex-symbol herself.

In "Small Rebellion," a Bob Hope Show drama scheduled for sometime in January, Miss Signoret makes one of her rare American television appearances, playing opposite George Maharis, formerly of Route 66. Wearing little makeup, as is her custom, she stood off-stage at Los Angeles' Lindy Opera House, where "Rebellion" was being filmed, and talked of her newest American television experience:

"When I was approached to do this show, I read the script and thought the quality was excellent. The pace is tough for me, though. I'm not used to it. You rehearse much longer for a play—at least four weeks. In that period of time the part can enter me.

"But I don't consider it work when I like the role. You know right away if you want to be that woman in that story. Then, by the time I actually perform, the part has been living with me. For example, I knew that woman in 'Room at the Top.' To achieve quality you need time. But I don't want to analyze too much what acting is. We should not know. Those who can explain it often cannot do it.

"Yes, I enjoyed working with George Maharis. He's a good actor. There was an enormous lot of lines to learn and George made me learn them. I can learn fast if the thoughts are simple, but there are ambiguous thoughts to this role. It revolves about an actress as an actress and as a woman. The actress doesn't want to admit what she really is as a woman, and wants a struggling young playwright to change the truth."

Miss Signoret has no plans for more television in America—unless an especially good part should turn up. Money, she says, has little lure for her. "My husband makes enough for two. Sometimes, when I am asked what my future acting plans are, I say nothing. So I get the feeling people are thinking, 'Ah, another out-of-work actress.' But now I can afford the luxury of not working for money. I feel there are two kinds of people in this business: those who give their lives for the industry—their hearts, nerves and brains; and those who just want money. We, myself and my husband, are free, free to say no.

"Television here is doing good things, I think. The coverage of the Watts riots was good, very objective. French television is generally less good than here. There is no commercial television in France so there is not as much money to spend on it. I have never done French television."

This is only the second time Miss Signoret has done dramatic television in the U.S. The first was a General Electric Theater episode, "Don't You Remember?", five years ago opposite Lee Marvin. She arrived in the U.S. last July 19 for the opening of the movie "Ship of Fools." Just prior to her arrival she taped in Normandy a segment for Eric Goldman's New York discussion show, The Open Mind. How does she feel about such extemporaneous shows? "It is a chance to express yourself sincerely. If you goof, it's your own goof; if you are sincere, it shows; if you lie, it shows. You can be betrayed in a written interview—made to look nicer or less nice than you actually are—but not in a television interview."

LETTERS

Correspondence for this department should be addressed to Letters Department, TV GUIDE, Radnor, Pa. All letters must be signed. Names withheld upon request.

VIEWER SERVICE

If you wish to write comments to those in charge of a specific show, you should send your letters to: (Name of Show), TV GUIDE Viewer Service, Box 800, Radnor, Pa. These letters will be forwarded to the proper executives.

ALMIGHTY RATINGS

In a recent letter to TV GUIDE concerning the survival of television drama, NAB Code Authority Director Howard H. Bell wrote that "great strides" have been made in broadcasting programs dealing with "valid moral and social issues" and "challenging adult themes." True perhaps, but it all seems in vain when, for every stride that television makes toward excellence, the almighty ratings take it a stride back to mediocrity.

POOR JOHNNY

I really feel sorry for Johnny Carson, who wants to get off his "five-a-week treadmill" ["For the Record," Nov. 6]. That poor fellow slaves a grudging one hour and 30 minutes a night. I figure this, multiplied by the 39 weeks of his year, deleting vacation time, comes to the staggering total of around 307 hours, for which he must make about $200,000 a year. Poor Johnny.

David M. White
St. Louis

[Johnny Carson has what is generally recognized as the toughest job in all show business. Nearly all of what he does is unscripted and unrehearsed.

He merely entertains millions of viewers 90 minutes a night, five nights a week, out of his own head and with nervous guests as his only foils. He earns every penny.—Ed.]

SCISSOR-HAPPY

For people who hadn't seen "Elmer Gantry" before, the CBS Thursday Night Movies must have been sheer confusion. CBS is scissor-happy.

Jeanne Zuccato
Yeadon, Pa.

I hope that director George Stevens wins his case—the right to cut and edit his own pictures for TV viewing ["For the Record," Nov. 6]. The horribly mutilated version of "Elmer Gantry" was an insult to the studio that produced it, the stars who appeared in it and the viewer.

Virginia R. Norton
Santa Barbara, Cal.

NOMINATED FOR RERUN

"Jimmy Durante Meets the Lively Arts" was a high-spot of fun entertainment for the season. It deserves first nomination for a rerun.

Ashton Pitre
Austin, Texas

THE S AND S BOYS

I Spy has in it a couple of very charming American men — Robert Culp and Bill Cosby. They have a special brand of sex-appeal and sophistication.

Mrs. S. Gladstone

MORE MOOREHEAD

Bewitched is far less "bewitching" without Agnes Moorehead's appearance each and every week!

FOR THE RECORD

Northern California Edition

The Big Blackout: When the power blackout first hit New York last Tuesday, one of the reactions around the rest of the country was: Oh, oh, there go the evening's TV schedules. As it turned out, except for the news shows, which are mostly live, there were only minor ripples, such as postponement of CBS's National Citizenship Test, and an old Johnny Carson Show rerun from Philadelphia. The networks feed their shows to affiliated stations in the various time zones from both New York and Los Angeles, so when New York's power failed they merely switched "feed" responsibility to the West Coast.

All except the news, that is. When the power went off at 5:27 P.M. (EST), just before the early news shows were to go on the air, there was some wild scrambling in the news departments. At ABC, Peter Jennings with the News was preparing for its first "feed," scheduled for 5:45. When the power went off, "feed" responsibility immediately was shifted to Washington, where Bill Gill, a recent addition to ABC News, anchored a show thrown together in 18 minutes. The other two networks' early news shows had more time, about an hour. They also shifted to Washington.

The remainder of the night, New York-based news personnel did yeoman work trying to get video pictures on the air. Telephone company cables powered by emergency generators were set up to Washington. At 8:30 P.M., CBS New York came on with Walter Cronkite and Harry Reasoner, but the picture faded after seven minutes. At 10:42 CBS came on again with a fairly comprehensive report, and NBC did the same with a charming 28 minutes starting at 11:33. Anchored by Frank McGee, the segment featured candlelight, kerosene and battery lamps and one mike on a bare table, with correspondents sitting around in the flickering light like spirit mediums at a séance.

Last Answer: There were three Dorothy Kilgallens — noted columnist, radio-TV personality and mother (three children; one grandchild) — but television viewers knew her best as panelist of CBS's What's My Line? Last week she died in her New York apartment. She was 52.

More Shuffling: Last week ABC continued to shuffle and cancel shows ("For the Record," Oct. 30) in an effort to elevate ratings. As of mid-January the network announced cancellation of O. K. Crackerby!, to be replaced by The Double Life of Henry Phylfe, starring Red Buttons, Thursdays at 8:30; Blue Light, starring Robert Goulet as a double-agent, replaces Gidget Wednesday nights at 8:30. Gidget moves to Thursdays at 8, replacing The Donna Reed Show, which replaces the canceled King Family Saturdays at 8. The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet moves to Saturdays at 7:30, replacing the previously canceled Shindig.

12:30 3 4 7 PRO FOOTBALL

—Raiders vs. Broncos

The Oakland Raiders meet the Broncos at Denver. The Raiders have stayed in contention with a tough defense, the passing of Dick Wood (18) to Art Powell (84) and Clem Daniels (36), and the running of Alan Miller (37). Bronco rushers Cookie Gilchrist (2) and Abner Haynes (28), and receiver Lionel Taylor (7) are among the league's best, but a leaky defense has kept the Broncos in the cellar. ■ END MONEY PROBLEMS—CONSOLIDATE

It makes good sense to arrange for a Homeowner loan to pay all your bills and installment loans. Then, instead of making many big payments each month, you'll have just one lower monthly payment—chances are it will be less than half of what you are now paying, because home loan payments are lower than those available through most any other loan.

■ MONEY FOR ANY REASON

Most property owners qualify even though there is a 1st and 2nd mortgage. Chances are you can too. Call the office nearest you—your loan can be approved on the phone.

8:30 5 8 10 12 SALUTE TO STAN LAUREL

SPECIAL COLOR Dick Van Dyke is host for this all-star tribute to the late Stan Laurel, the bow-tied partner in the comedy team of Laurel and Hardy.

During the taped hour, there are film clips from "Laurel and Hardy's Laughing Twenties"; Buster Keaton and Lucille Ball offer a pantomime, set in a city park, about a policeman (Harvey Korman) who keeps breaking up the fun; Phil Silvers compares his career with Laurel's classic "Little Man"; Bob Newhart tells about Uncle Freddie, host of a TV children's show featuring Laurel and Hardy films; Audrey Meadows portrays the heroine in "The Perils of Pauline"; and Louis Nye, Cesar Romero, Tina Louise and Leonid Kinskey re-create a silent-film set, where the director demands mood music to accompany the action.

Danny Kaye recalls the night he accepted an Oscar for Stan in 1961, and a film clip shows Laurel's antic reaction to the award. Gregory Peck appears on

FRANK SINATRA—Songs

SPECIAL COLOR During this hour, Sinatra sings the songs "that mean something to me," gathered from his 25 years in show business.

Frank opens the show with a group of his personal favorites: "I've Got You Under My Skin," "Without a Song," "I Get a Kick Out of You," "Don't Worry About Me," "Nancy (with the Laughing Face)" and "My Kind of Town." In a segment following the stages of man's life, Frank sings "It Was a Very Good Year," "Young at Heart," "The Girl Next Door," "Last Night, When We Were Young" and "This Is All I Ask."

The final act emphasizes up-tempo numbers: "Come Fly with Me," "Learnin' the Blues," "Lady Is a Tramp," "You Make Me Feel So Young" and "One for My Baby." To conclude the show, Frank offers a reading of "Angel Eyes" and sings "Put Your Dreams Away."

The orchestras of Nelson Riddle and Gordon Jenkins provide the backing. Produced by Dwight Hemion, who directed Barbra Streisand's special last season.

"We ought to be planning now what the Congress will look like in 1975 and, indeed, perhaps 2000."

—Sen. Joseph Clark (D., Pa.)

SPECIAL COLOR In the past few years, Congress has come under increasing criticism from political observers who feel that its legislative machinery is in need of an overhaul. David Brinkley narrates this study of Congressional procedures, which includes suggestions for streamlining the Congress.

The management-consultant firm of Arthur D. Little was commissioned by NBC to make an efficiency study of Congress, and the firm's recommendations are included in the report.

To illustrate the complex schedule of the average Congressman, cameras show Rep. Olin Teague (D., Texas) handling a heavy load of paper work in his office, visiting constituents in Texas and view-

'THE WONDERFUL WORLD OF CHILDREN'

SPECIAL COLOR Once you've become an adult, it's impossible to return to the world of children—unless, like Sammy Davis Jr., you can remember some of their rules.

On this Thanksgiving Day special, Sammy gets permission from a group of talented youngsters to return to their happy-go-lucky world. Included in his itinerary is a visit to a children's TV studio, where the "Hidely-Seekly Report" is in progress, and a trip to "The Place," where the music à go-go is provided by the rock 'n' rolling Dino Martin Jr., Desi Arnaz Jr. and Billy Hinshe.

The hour includes songs written especially for the show by Charles Strause and Lee Adams, who wrote the score for Broadway's "Golden Boy," in which Sammy is presently starring. (60 min.)

Highlights

- "The Worry Song" .....Sammy
 "The Beautiful Land," "Walking down the Road," "Inchworm"
 .....Sammy, Children
 "Style" .....Sammy, Bobby Riha

"... our problems of crime, juvenile delinquency and mental health are fed by ugliness. ... Beauty and happiness are certainly inextricably tied together."

—Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson

SPECIAL COLOR The First Lady narrates this report on the redevelopment and beautification of the Nation's capital.

Last February, Mrs. Johnson formed a committee to eradicate ugliness in America's cities and countryside. Her first goal: to turn Washington into a model for the rest of the country.

During the hour tour, the First Lady visits the now-polluted Potomac River, once a favorite swimming place of President John Quincy Adams; Southwest Washington, a former slum area that has been redeveloped; Georgetown, which still retains its Colonial flavor; and the Mall, stretching from the Capitol to the Lincoln Memorial, which is being redeveloped as a park.

Producers: John Secondari and Helen Jean Rogers (Mrs. Secondari). (60 min.)

Answer to last week's puzzle

For the producers
of 'The FBI' . . .

PUBLIC ENEMY No. 1 is ED SULLIVAN

By Richard Warren Lewis

Scores of curious spectators gathered at the abandoned railroad station in Irvine, Cal.: workers from the neighboring orange groves, fathers with children perched on their shoulders, and preening teen-aged blondes hoping to be discovered by one of the film crew. Some of them sat on the rails in the strong, August sun, watching tattooed grips lug wire cables and roll outsized floodlights into position. As the camera rolled, actor Efrem Zimbalist Jr. nimbly jumped on top of a wooden table and shouted his lines at a hostile mob of extras. Halfway through his speech, the director moaned: "Cut." Zimbalist looked up and menacingly shook his fist at the sky. His big moment in a segment of the new series The FBI had been muffled by a low-flying jet.

Nearly a dozen takes, dissipating two hours on the dusty set, were required to complete the one-minute scene. Circling fighter planes from the El Toro air base a mile away, their Mach 1 speed popping the ears, interrupted shooting virtually every five minutes. Nine-car Santa Fe diesels, whistles wide open, rumbled through the siding punctually each hour. The discordance of half-ton trucks speeding on the Santa Ana Freeway two blocks away added a relentless din that drove the sound engineer to distraction.

grumbled about the misfit who had selected such an inappropriate location, director Don Medford battled to finish additional scenes in the fading twilight. Three days of greasy fried chicken and leathery veal cutlets, served beneath the shadows of Union 76 oil storage tanks and twin grain elevators owned by the Irvine Bean and Grain Growers Association, merely increased the general discomfort.

So did the charges reaching Irvine—a World War II center for Japanese-Americans—that the episode being filmed was insulting to the nisei community. A chapter of the Japanese-American Citizens League blasted the recounting of an incident involving a wartime traitor, claiming “the facts are distorted to impugn the loyalty of Japanese-Americans.”

Long before its premiere, the series also felt the sting of criticisms—reported by Jack Gould, the New York Times television critic—of an FBI check into the backgrounds of the actors cast in the show's four major roles. “In some television quarters,” Gould wrote, “the disclosure of the FBI scrutiny of actors was seen as an example of the recurring conflict between public-relations considerations and maximum artistic freedom in the medium.” A member of the Screen Actors Guild had implied that the FBI check was tantamount to blacklisting. Earlier, Gould had voiced his displeasure over the FBI's lending its support to a commercial TV enterprise.

“I think Jack Gould takes a hostile attitude toward television,” pooh-poohed bespectacled executive producer Quinn Martin, “and a pseudo-intellectual approach to build straw men he can try to knock down for the purpose of making controversy.”

Of greater concern to Martin were the prospects of the hour-long show in its Sunday night time slot. For years, ABC had failed to dislodge Ed Sullivan from his Sunday-at-8 fiefdom. This time ABC appropriated the largest budget for a 60-minute series in its history to pay for color filming and exotic locations outside the studio. But still, an adventure show with such sinewy subject matter as a fetish killer who murders girls with long hair, an attempted rape, and intricate extortion plots had never before succeeded on the traditional family viewing night.

Sullivan countered with a heavyweight opening show spotlighting the Beatles and Soupy Sales and followed with six weeks of color originations in Hollywood with such names as Eddie Fisher, Judy Garland, Milton Berle and Dinah Shore. “We're in very tough,” Martin admitted. “If we're not successful, then ABC should give up trying to beat Sullivan.” (The early Nielsen returns have been encouraging—though Sullivan's ratings have been high, so have The FBI's.)

An estimated 600 written requests to do a radio or TV series on the FBI had been rejected before Director J. Edgar Hoover finally relented. The green light flashed largely through the efforts of ABC-TV president Tom Moore and Warner Brothers executive vice president Benj. Kalmenson (Warners had produced “The F.B.I. Story,” a film starring James Stewart, in 1959). Immediately they selected

Martin, who ironically had glamorized the lawless by producing the original Untouchables, to similarly extol the FBI.

Last winter the three men met with Hoover in his stark office at the Department of Justice in Washington, D.C. For an hour-and-a-half, Hoover reminisced about the emergence of the FBI in the Thirties and its struggles with John Dillinger, Baby Face Nelson, Pretty Boy Floyd and the Ku Klux Klan. He also revealed some unpublicized FBI goofs, like the time a special agent forgot his handcuffs and was forced to bind a criminal with his necktie, and another occasion when a G-man captured a Top 10 criminal in a strange town and got lost looking for the local jail. The hoodlum eventually had to supply the directions himself.

No antiheroes wanted

There were also informal discussions of politics and horse racing between Hoover, a frequent visitor to the Del Mar, Cal., race track, and horse owner Martin, whose thoroughbred Fool's Trick has won at Hollywood Park, Santa Anita and Del Mar. It was not necessary for Martin to convince Hoover that the series would take a positive stance toward the Bureau. Says Martin: "You don't take on the FBI and then figure out how to make antiheroes." He barely touched upon the six-page presentation of the series that he carried in an attaché case, although he did leave a copy with Hoover. (An FBI source later indicated that The Fugitive was one of the favorite shows of both Hoover and President Lyndon B. Johnson.)

The four major characters outlined in the mimeographed blue folder bore a certain resemblance to existing television favorites. Key figure was trouble-shooting Insp. Lew Erskine, a 30-year veteran of the Bureau. His sleuthing would take him out of Washington each week by plane, car, boat and horseback (much like Kimble on The Fugitive). Selected for the lead was Zimbalist, who, since portraying private-eye Stuart Bailey on 77 Sunset Strip, had been working mostly in movies ("By Love Possessed," "The Chapman Report," "The Reward").

"I didn't want him to play a visceral man," said Martin of Zimbalist, the son of a concert violinist, who reads 17th-century novels and Rosicrucian tracts with equal enthusiasm. "Efrem has a marvelous quality of being intellectually tough without looking like a rough guy. I also found him to be very sober, literally. It's very hard to find actors you can live with who will work 12, 14 hours a day. And he was available. The availability was very important."

The outline also noted Arthur Ward (played by veteran character-actor Philip Abbott), an assistant director in charge of field operations not unlike Leo G. Carroll on The Man from U.N.C.L.E.; and Jack Rhodes, Zimbalist's callow assistant reminiscent of his wavy-haired aide-de-camp on 77. Stephen Brooks, a boyish-looking neophyte fresh from a summer-stock tour with Jayne Mansfield, won the role, which was embellished with romantic overtones.

According to the presentation: "In 1944, there had been an ambush at [Erskine's] home; his wife had been killed. Now his daughter has chosen to fall in love with an FBI agent [Rhodes] and [Erskine] is stubbornly determined that history is not going to repeat itself. It's a point of conflict that rasps on all three, a character dilemma that will provide a continuing conflict in the series." Says Martin: "I had to do something to humanize the institution of the FBI, that's why I wrote that subplot."

His choice for Barbara Erskine was 21-year-old Lynn Loring, a 5-foot-2-inch, freckle-faced redhead familiar to Hollywood gossip-column readers for her much-publicized off-camera romances (latest: Roy Thinnes, starring in the new series The Long, Hot Summer). Miss Loring had previously labored for nine years on a soap opera, Search for Tomorrow, and the quick-flop Fair Exchange.

Girl with a lollipop

Wearing a red jockey's cap, one of Thinnes' dotted shirts hanging outside her white slacks, green leather sandals and saucer-shaped sunglasses, Miss Loring lolled around the Irvine location sucking on a chocolate lollipop. She was spending her day off peering over the director's shoulder, observing his camera angles. "I really would like to be a director someday," she said.

"Efrem has the greatest hair in television," she observed, as the actor tidied his thick, coal-black hair in a pocket mirror held by a makeup man. "A lady barber in the San Fernando Valley does it for him. I like Efrem a lot, even though he doesn't turn me on."

physical appeal to women more mature than Miss Loring could help put over the show. At 46, with deep wrinkles around his dark eyes, he possesses not only the debonair good looks but also the lithe physique of a much younger man. Zimbalist's face is so heavily tanned from weekend tennis matches that he wears no makeup. His wardrobe, custom-made by the same haberdasher currently favored by Frank Sinatra, is closer to Gentlemen's Quarterly than Government Issue. Script-girls' heads whirl when he motors through Warners' gates in his silver-blue Bentley and ambles onto Stage 22 in faded denims and tennis sneakers.

His credibility in the role was advanced by a one-week familiarization program last summer, including a day at the FBI Academy in Quantico, Va. Agents briefed him on the FBI method of hand-to-hand combat. He fired pistols at pop-up targets, shotguns at clay pigeons and visited the fingerprint, graphology and laboratory divisions. He stopped off at the Department of Justice in Washington to chat with the chief. Hoover was even more garrulous than he was with Martin. "I looked at my watch when I left and I couldn't believe it," Zimbalist recalls. "He spent two hours and four minutes talking, mostly about the high points in his career."

Should Zimbalist stumble in his switch from private to public eye, an FBI technical advisor is stationed full-time on the set. The sunglassed G-man has been kiddingly christened "007." Already, he has coached Zimbalist on the SOP for protecting himself during a shoot-out. Other tips have included the proper way to fingerprint and handcuff a suspect. On the first day of shooting, he informed young Brooks that an FBI man would never stand with hands in his pockets. Cast members snickered while 007

(real name: Ed Kemper) offered this counsel standing with his right hand in his own pants pocket.

Further FBI technical supervision comes from Cartha (Deke) DeLoach, the assistant director of crime records in Washington. His department screens thousands of case histories, all of them closed, and sends the most vivid to Quinn Martin Productions in Hollywood. One of Martin's staff synthesizes these cases and channels them to the executive producer. "We start from truth," says Martin, "and mold it into a dramatic piece."

All the cases are delicately disguised to avoid recognition. "I work very carefully with the research and legal departments," Martin explains, "to make sure that we change enough that we don't lay QM, Warners or ABC open to lawsuits."

A job of camouflage

Meticulously revised episodes embrace bank robbery, private armies, Army desertion and a two-part adventure incorporating three famous spy cases. His least successful job of camouflage, however, is the segment shot at Irvine—the story of Meatball Kawakita, an American citizen who defected to Japan, became a sadistic prison-camp overlord, and later slipped back to the United States. The case made national headlines several years ago when FBI agents tracked down the traitor in Los Angeles.

"I could have switched him to a Nazi and made it an all-German community," says Martin, who retains total creative control of the show's content without FBI interference, "but that wasn't unique. I've seen that story before. We're doing a very high-styled, high-class police show. We're shooting these as if they're high-class movies, so you don't feel like you're watching 'The House on 92nd Street.' That's yesterday's television."

SATURDAY'S HEROES ARE SUNDAY'S GOLDFINGERS

By Melvin Durslag

In a restaurant two years ago, your correspondent sat at dinner with officials of the Los Angeles Rams and a celebrated bonus infant the club had brought to gaff that afternoon.

The player, Terry Baker of Oregon State, was the winner of just about every major award, and he used his credentials to tap the Rams for upward of $75,000. Now at dinner, a philosophical discussion developed over the rising cost of football players.

"In the present market," said Elroy Hirsch, assistant to the Ram president, "it is hard to determine the true value of players." Then turning to Baker, he asked, "How, for instance, would you decide your own worth?"

Coolly, the 21-year-old responded, "Before I could determine my true worth, I would have to read your financial statement."

The Ram officials exchanged significant looks. In this rural lad, they saw the picture of professional football today. Saturday's heroes have emerged as Sunday's Goldfingers in a world made to order for those wearing the helmet and the pad.

When TV football viewers tune their sets this fall to CBS, which is televising 96 National Football League games, and to NBC, which is carrying 47 games of the American League, they will see the most fortunate performers in sports—war capitalists, in a sense, who are taking advantage of the conflict between the two leagues to rake in the bank notes.

Relying mostly on their TV money to carry on the fight, the leagues are proffering zany sums to these children, most of whom are coming to negotiate these days with (a) a lawyer, (b) an accountant and (c) an investment counselor. Idly, we inquired of a bonus baby how he was investing his cabbage. He replied, "I have a well-rounded portfolio, some blue chips, some speculative. I hope to buy more aggressively as I go along."

Up until 1960, when the National League pretty much controlled pro football, the majority of players took what they were offered. Their leverage in negotiating was twofold. They could threaten to play in Canada or forgo the game altogether. To persuade a superstar to sign, the NFL would sometimes tender a bonus of as much as $5000.

Today, such an inducement couldn't get you a drum major.

The spending madness seems to have started in the first year of the American League, when a running back from Louisiana State named Billy Cannon signed a contract with the National League's Rams. As dangerous with a pen as he was in the open field, he also signed a contract with Houston of the American League. The two clubs went to court, with the following result: Houston won, if you wish to use the term loosely. It gained title to Cannon after $73,000 in legal fees and after handing him a three-year contract calling for $110,000.

In addition, he was promised a 50-percent interest in a chain of gas stations which Houston owner Bud Adams was to build in Cannon's home town of Baton Rouge, La. The player also got a Cadillac, but, since it was used, he gave it to his father, a maintenance man.

Today, the New York Jets alone have enriched two quarterbacks by $600,000. Joe Namath of Alabama got $400,000 of it and the remainder went to John Huarte of Notre Dame. Huarte never made the team but has been held in reserve on what is known as the "taxi squad." When we reflect payments of such sums by David (Sonny) Werblin, the owner of the Jets, we somehow recall a famous used-car dealer in Los Angeles named Madman Muntz. Attired in a Napoleonic uniform, he posed for pictures for billboards in which he announced recklessly, "I'd give it all away if my wife would let me."

Among owners of pro teams, a sharp disparity of opinion exists over whether new players should receive such riches. Obviously, Werblin thinks they should, because he has just paid them. And rival owner Jerry Wolman of the Philadelphia Eagles concurs.

"It's like any other business in which you are forced to pay the market price," says Wolman. "In a market in which everything is inflat-ing, the costs become relative. More is now being paid for talent than previously—but each NFL team is also getting $1 million a year from TV."

Nor has the value of football franchises decreased. The Philadelphia owner points out that a club costing him $5.5 million less than two years ago is probably worth twice that today. A staggering $9 million was paid for the new franchise in Atlanta.

"Would you, too, dish out $400,000 for a Joe Namath?" Wolman was asked.

"Absolutely, if we felt he could do the job we want," he answered.

The president of the champion Cleveland Browns, Arthur Modell, describes the Namath deal as an act of exhibitionism. "It's a theatrical stunt for which sports isn't yet ready," he says. "You can't raise your ticket scale just because Namath is on your roster. When we can get road-show prices for having such a player, we'll sign a Joe Namath too. But today I have withdrawn from the running for all $400,000 quarterbacks. I don't even want one marked down to $350,000."

The acquisition of expensive bonus babies has two other hazards. First, college stars who are high draft choices frequently turn out to be busts among the pros. And second, the payment of excessive sums to rosy-jawed rookies creates less than a happy spirit among the veterans.

Whether bonus babies are worth today's prices isn't known for certain, but it is a fact that the Jets, after signing Namath and Huarte, found a startling increase in ticket sales. They have sold more than 40,000 season seats, contrasted to 22,000 in 1964.

"And we expect it to get even better next year," says plunger Werblin. "When we show exciting players on television, we are building up our product all over the country."

Listening to the man's enthusiasm, one reaches the conclusion that maybe Namath and Huarte came in too cheap.

A PIED PIPER

When hardened show-biz characters—"cool" musicians and "couldn't-care-less" cameramen and stagehands—all stand around with wistful, smiling faces, you know something's going on. In this case it was a rehearsal for this week's "Sammy Davis and the Wonderful World of Children," an ABC special scheduled for Nov. 25.

As the show opens, Sammy is walking out of his dressing room in his tuxedo. A man calls out, saying he'll meet Sammy later at a party. Sam continues walking and comes to a gate. It is the gate to the world of children. Sammy is asked to take three vows: (1) "Whatever it is I didn't do it unless it's good in which case I did it even if I didn't"; (2) "Cleanliness is next to impossible—a little dirt never hurt"; and (3) "Nothing is unbelievable if you really believe in it"—whereupon he is allowed to enter.

He becomes a kid himself—dressed in red sweater, white slacks and sneakers (above)—and joins in the children's play. Later, the man's voice calls again and Sam leaves through the gate. End of show.

"You know," Sammy said during a lull, "every day parents have that one marvelous time—maybe an hour or so —when they're let into that wonderful world of kids. It's a story time, or some other sort of make-believe. And gee, it's warm and nice. Then—wham! —it's back to our world." He added, somewhat wistfully, "You know, I never really had a childhood of my own. . . . I didn't learn to ride a bike until I was 16." Then he looked around, and brightened. "Boy, it's great doing kids' things. I love it."

There's this guy on TV every morning, and while I'm studying the sports pages and wondering whether I dare sneak another slice of toast with just a smidgen of jam on it to cover up that glittering high-priced spread, he's yapping his head off about keeping fit. And, having downed her dry toast and black coffee, my wife is in the living room doing knee bends and deep breathing like she's getting ready to swim the Channel.

But she's not too busy to hear the toast pop up. Then she stops her huffing and puffing long enough to yell, "Uh-huh—you're sabotaging the President's physical-fitness program." And I say, "Phooey on the President's physical-fitness program, I'm hungry."

Now this goes on for months, and yourself, read the forecast in the paper. But then he comes on, prancing and jiggling. Now, no guy older than 22 and not in training for a moon shot has any right to look like he does. He's got these stretch pants on, and he's wearing a polo shirt and he grins out at us and delivers a little speech on how good he feels and how wonderful it is to be alive, and it's a grand, grand morning, isn't it?

It is—or was, until I get a look at his rippling biceps, his yard-wide shoulders and that tummy that looks like he's been lying under a steam-roller all night.

"Okay, folks," he says, bouncing around the studio, while an organ grinds out the "Colonel Bogey March" and "The Maine Stein Song"—tunes that ought to be outlawed from the pretty soon none of her clothes fit, so she starts putting the arm on me for a whole new outfit and I begin to think, maybe that windbag on TV has something there—and maybe the President does, too. Besides, my suits have gotten a mite tight around the gut and under the arms. So I say, "You're on, doll. I'll give this muscle man a whirl."

I get up half an hour earlier, peel off my pajama top and stand before the TV flexing my flab and figuring maybe this isn't going to be too bad after all. And, full of good spirits and high resolve, I say, "What can I lose, doll?"

"Some lard," she cracks and does a deep knee bend.

Now, up until this morning, the guy has been just another annoying morning sound on TV, like those guys who tell you what kind of weather they think it's going to be—having, like air waves any time before sunset.

We do what he calls some "simple warmups," designed to loosen up for what is to follow.

What follows are two commercials, back to back. One is for a chocolate cake mix, the other for low-calorie ginger ale. By the time Muscles reappears I'm half starved, thinking of that cake. And the simple warmup exercises have me windied.

He makes another little speech about how good he feels, then explains that the next exercise will help me get rid of "that dowager's hump." We go through much agonized abuse of muscles that only a shot-putter ever has any occasion to use. Then while I'm trying to catch my breath he straddles a chair and tells us some jokes (at least, he said they were jokes) to exercise our funny bones.

After the jokes he takes a back seat while Smokey the Bear warns us about setting forest fires, and another commercial shows a guy in an iron suit on a horse galloping up the street and whacking at people with a long stick. Now, I think, there's a guy who keeps himself in condition, but when I look again he's gone and Mr. Gymnasium is back as big as life—bigger, in fact, because by this time I can feel myself sinking down to dwarf-size.

At this point he addresses himself to the task of firming up my bustline. Even though I haven't given much thought lately to my bustline, I figure I'm in this thing up to my fat head so I might as well go along. So I rotate my arms and fill my lungs with that good, clean room air.

Just as we get started, he fades from the screen, telling us to keep at it and "I'll be back right after this brief shares his fan mail with us. All the letters are from ladies expressing gratitude for losing various humps, bumps and bulges, a miracle they attribute to his daily program and to his long-playing hi-fi record which captures on vinyl all the riches of his live program. Lucky me! He's having a special on that record today—for a mere $5.95, postpaid.

Finally, after the longest 30 minutes in my long experience of watching TV, Mr. Muscles bids us good health, good morning and good exercising—and don't forget to send for that hi-fi record. I collapse into a hot tub and soak my tortured body for a glorious half hour, wondering what's so wrong with being a little plump here and there. After all, look at Woolcott, Sydney Greenstreet, Tony Galento.

OFF ABOUT KEEPING FIT...'

message." The brief message turns out to be two messages, one about some new oven cleaner and the other about shampoo in a slippery tube that everybody keeps dropping.

When he comes back he shows us a series of excruciating gyrations that will help reduce my "secretary's spread" and melt enough lard from my hips so I can don a sheath dress without turning purple. (He also confides that if I keep at it, this exercise will trim down my thighs so that I'll have that slinky look in my Bikini.)

At this point I'm ready to slug him, rippling muscles or no rippling muscles, but he disappears behind a low-calorie cola commercial, a brief drama full of happy skinny people laughing their heads off. Upon his return he gives us what he calls a breather (in my case it is a lifesaver that fends off collapse) while he

They did all right.

That evening when my wife suggests we forgo the martinis lest they interfere with our physical-fitness program, I can see that our marriage has entered a critical stage. It is now or never. So I make a deal. She gets her new outfit. I agree to give up that extra slice of toast and worry along with my dowager's hump, my falling bustline and my secretary's spread.

But what she doesn't know is that I have a sinister plan that goes beyond this stalemate, for I go along with General MacArthur that the object of war is victory. And so I have already sent my $5.95 for that hi-fi record. When it comes I propose to try a special exercise all my own with it. I'll hold the record firmly between my hands, lift one knee, then bring the record down upon it with great force. I call it my hi-fi-sometric exercise.

Norwegian Cinderella

Once upon a time, some 20 years ago in the final phases of the Nazi occupation of Norway, there was a tiny, wide-eyed, blonde baby girl named Birgit Annalisa Rusanen. Her mother was a Norwegian; her father, a German soldier who has not been heard from since. When she was two weeks old, she was left at an orphanage in Oslo, Norway.

Now upon a time, this fall, there is a new TV series called Lost in Space. In it, playing the space family's older daughter, is a slim, wide-eyed, flaxen-haired girl who looks like a combination of Mia Farrow and Tuesday Weld. Her name is Marta Kristen.

The story of Birgit (or, if you will, Marta) from Oslo, Norway, to Hollywood, rivals "Cinderella." But there is no fairy godmother. Only a philosophy professor, his kindly wife, and what Marta calls "the good luck to be an adaptable extrovert."

At 4 Birgit was simply one of thousands of unwanted war waifs. But even then she seemed to have some irrepressible sparkle. A photograph of that time shows a little girl dressed in long heavy stockings and a dark shapeless smock with a pixy grin. "I don't remember too much about the orphanage," she says, "except it was really a large old house, and I used to love to sing there."

That same photograph was sent to a Prof. and Mrs. Harold Soderquist of Detroit (he teaches at Wayne State University), who were eager to adopt a war orphan. After a year of red tape, she arrived, all alone, on a plane.

She didn't speak English. But Marta says she wasn't frightened. She cried only once, when she realized that her "smeller" (a handkerchief she always carried, and that "smelled like home") had been left behind. Mrs. Soderquist promptly substituted her own handkerchief.

"After that," says Marta, "everything seemed to be all right."

Under the loving care of the Soderquists, older people who were really more like grandparents, Birgit thrived. (As part of her new life, her name was changed to the more American sounding Martha, which was the name of the woman who had arranged for her adoption. Later, for acting purposes, she changed it to the European version, Marta.) She adapted to America with sparkle and grace. In junior high she was a straight-A student. At home she loved entertaining family guests with singing and dancing. She began thinking about being an actress. "It seemed," she says, "the most American thing for a young girl to want to be!"

At 12 she played summer stock in Birmingham, Mich. Then one day in 1959 Professor Soderquist took his family to California on sabbatical leave. Marta remained there, with a guardian, attending Hollywood Professional School. She changed her last name to Kristen. And the Cinderella quality of her life persisted.

"It sounds made-up," says Marta. "I was sitting in a restaurant with a boy friend having a hamburger, and a man who said he was a producer named Jimmy Harris came up and asked if I'd like to test for 'Lolita.' I thought he was kidding, until I checked up. It's a good thing I didn't get the part. After testing, I went out and read the book. There was a lot in it I didn't understand."

Two years ago the adaptable extrovert met a young man—at the beach, surfing. Six months later they were married. He is Terence Treadwell, a graduate student in psychology at San Fernando Valley State College.

So all is well for Cinderella. She is still close to her family in Michigan. Her career is thriving. Her marriage, she says, has given her "great confidence and security."

The slipper seems a perfect fit.

REVIEW

by Cleveland Amory

F Troop

If you don't mind your humor stretched far, wide and then some, you could do far worse this season than make a late TV-dinner date with F Troop—which is not only the spoof to end all spoofs on Indian warfare but also tells you, in no uncertain terms, how the West was lost. The Society of the Descendants of the 7th Cavalry is undoubtedly in high dudgeon about it all, but for the low taste of this curmudgeon, the first and third episodes were two of the funniest shows we've seen all season.

In the first we see Capt. Wilton Parmenter (excellently played by Ken Berry) being assigned to command F Troop at Fort Courage. Here he not only has to fight the Indians but also his own men—in particular Sergeant O'Rourke (Forrest Tucker) and Corporal Agarn (Larry Storch), who run, in league with the Hekawi Indians, a black-market operation which would put Switzerland to shame. Parmenter mumbles, bumbles, stumbles and even fumbles his way from reveille, which is played at 10 o'clock in the morning ("You forget, sir, there's a three-hour time difference"), to retreat

("Why should we retreat? We won"). All the time, he is aided and abetted by beauteous Wrangler Jane (well-played by Melody Patterson), as well as Frank de Kova (Chief Wild Eagle) and, of all people, Edward Everett Horton as Roaring Chicken, son of Sitting Duck, the medicine man. A particularly ticklish situation develops when it is necessary to pretend that the docile red men are on the war-path and plan an attack. Nobody can even remember how to do a war dance, though Roaring Chicken does recall, "It's very much like a rain dance, only drier."

The third episode gave us Major Bentley-Royce (brilliantly played by Bernard Fox), the "Phantom Maja from Inja." A man who has lived for a month on curried cartridge belts—"Madras style, of course"—he is no man to be trifled with when it comes to the art of camouflage. He attempts to make phantoms out of all of F Troop, disguising them as tree stumps, horses and even buffalo, and the result is hilarious.

A show we sampled later did not, unfortunately, live up to the promise of these two. In it, Parmenter's far-from-phantom Philadelphia piancée, Lucy (Linda Marshall), attempts to pry him away from Fort Courage and Wrangler Jane. Though the writers tried everything—even mixing "Annie Get Your Gun" with "Pygmalion"—after Lucy had fainted twice and O'Rourke and Agarn once each, we gave it all up to contemplate Wild Eagle's sayings. One of these was: "Bark of tree never bitter to a hungry squirrel." Asked what it meant, Wild Eagle shrugged. "Well," he said, "it loses a little something in translation." All in all, none the less, this was an episode which shows how quickly F Troop can go from F sharp to F flat.
